CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

ABBackground of the Problem

There are four skills that students must master when learning English: speaking, listening, reading, and writing. Speaking is one of them, and it is considered a productive skill. According to Richard (1991, p. 90), speaking is the most important skill by which students will be judged in real-life situations. It plays a vital role in everyday interactions, and people's first impressions are often based on their ability to speak fluently and coherently. Richard further states that "speaking is among the central elements of communication in EFL (English as a Foreign Language) teaching, and it requires special attention and guidance."

Speaking performance is fundamental for mastering English, particularly for students majoring in English education. Students in English language education programs must be able to speak English properly and accurately. According to Rickheit & Strohner (2008), speaking performance Einvolves delivering a speech with a purpose or intention, which is then processed by the speaker and the listener to understand the intended message. In EFL classes, many students are able to enhance their speaking skills despite their limited practice outside the classroom. This is often due to various offactors that make them uncomfortable speaking in front of their peers or in public settings. Therefore, the classroom becomes their primary opportunity to Syarif Kasim Riau

Speaking performance can be a challenging task for many students.

Yusuf (2009, p. 115) stated that several problems can arise during speaking performance, including psychological barriers. When students experience psychological barriers, it can hinder their concentration, cause nervousness, and even lead to stuttering. Psychological barriers are significant in conversations or classroom activities, as they have a profound impact on elearning. Brown (1991, p. 73) asserts that these barriers affect learning in fundamental ways, as they form the foundation of learning strategies and etchniques. This means that every emotional and cognitive state of the students, whether at a low or high level, plays a crucial role.

The more learners are not confident, it will affect their speaking performance, for example afraid to speak in front of people, fear of making mistakes, or afraid if their classmate will laugh of them, this is in accordance with Oxford's statement (1999 p. 60) that the research reveal there is a negative relationship between psychological barries and speaking performance. The problems of foreign language anxiety do not only happen to be ginner but also the university students who usually deal with English. The possibility that anxiety interferes with language learning has long interested scholars, language teachers, and language learners themselves (Horwitz, 2001).

Foreign language anxiety, also known as xenoglossophobia, refers to Foreign language anxiety, also known as xenoglossophobia, refers to of the feelings of unease, worry, nervousness, and apprehension experienced when learning or using a second or foreign language. Horwitz (2001) defines foreign language anxiety as a distinct combination of self-perceptions, beliefs, arif Kasim Riau

Ifeelings, and behaviors related to language learning in the classroom, stemming from the unique nature of the language learning process. Foreign language anxiety manifests when students aim to communicate effectively, which requires them to express their thoughts genuinely. Negative experiences in learning English can contribute to the development of foreign language anxiety. It can demotivate students, undermine their confidence in their language skills, deter them from participating in classroom activities, and even lead to a disinterest in learning the English language (Na, 2007).

In a speaking class, when students are speaking a foreign language, they often experience an anxious feeling when they want to produce language. This anxious feeling can lead to a fear of speaking. Foreign language anxiety can affect students' self-perceptions, beliefs, feelings, and behavior towards the learning process (Nelman & Ganap, 2018). As a result, students may become passive in the classroom and feel anxious when the teacher asks them several questions, especially in a speaking class.

According to Mahmoodzadelh (2012), Foreign Language Anxiety (FLA) can have a negative impact on learners' performance. It can also cadversely affect learners' speech and overall learning experience. Speaking classes are provided for learners who are majoring in English to practice their speaking skills. However, as mentioned above, it is not necessary that college students will experience FLA during speaking classes. In conclusion, FLA is grown of the strongest factors that negatively affect learning, particularly in Scommunication. Yet, this study aims to identify the factors faced by foreign Panguage learners in language anxiety and the types of anxiety that most of othem struggle with. The study investigated university-level students studying the English language who had taken speaking courses at different proficiency evels (basic, intermediate, advanced). ~ Based on a review of previous research, studies on foreign language  $\subset$ anxiety have been widely conducted at the school level, including both junior and senior high schools (e.g., Rusini 2017, ISTN 2022, DWI 2020, Roli 2020). However, such research has not been extensively conducted at campuses with Islamic characteristics. Therefore, the researcher decided to carry out research on FLA at UIN Suska Riau, focusing on English language education students in their seventh semester. These students have completed most of their obligatory courses and are currently taking the final course, which is teaching practice. The teaching practice program requires students to demonstrate their speaking skills in front of the students they are teaching.

During the teacher training program, students are expected to have no difficulty using English in the classroom. However, based on the researcher bobservation of seventh-semester students participating in the teaching practice program, many of them actually struggled to actively use English when teaching English in the classroom. They faced difficulties in spontaneously speaking English during instruction, indicating a lack of confidence in their English proficiency. They tended to avoid using English as the medium of instruction and often resorted to using Bahasa Indonesia when communicating Syarif Kasim Riau Tuse of less English, despite the expectation to develop students' oral opproduction skills. In conclusion, they appeared less comfortable when teaching English in an English-speaking environment.

From the phenomena identified before, the researcher feel interested to conduct research to study the phenomena more deeply under the title:

CHAPTER II

REVIEW OF RELATED LITERATURE

Definition of Speaking Performance

Speaking is a fundamental skill for learning a foreign language as it enables communication, demonstrates language proficiency, and reflects our intellect. According to Suryani (2015), "speaking is used to express meanings so that other people can make sense of them." In other words, speaking directly involves productive skills and serves as an interactive process to convey feelings, thoughts, ideas, opinions, and information, engaging others in communication. The demand for strong communication skills in English has created a significant global need to achieve a good understanding of the language. Consequently, developing excellent speaking abilities has become a vital and crucial aspect of learning English."

Jones (1989, p.14) stated that speaking is a form of communication, emphasizing the importance of effectively conveying one's message. According to Jones, how something is said can be just as crucial as what is being said in ensuring the successful transfer of meaning. Consequently, speaking is recognized as a means of communication that necessitates speakers to express their thoughts and ideas as effectively as possible in order to effectively convey their intended message.

According to Burton, the key aspect of speaking lies in the manner in which individuals allow each other to express themselves through a series of signals, such as tone of voice, hand gestures, and facial expressions. The speaker, in an active role, responds verbally in a corresponding manner. Moreover, speaking is not solely reliant on the voice but also on facial expressions, which enhance understanding and clarity in conversations.

Meanwhile, Donough and Shaw (2003, p. 157) state that speaking serves various purposes, including expressing ideas and opinions, conveying wishes or desires, negotiating or solving problems, and establishing and maintaining social relationships and friendships. In addition to fluency, accuracy, and confidence, these authors emphasize the importance of these goals in speaking. Therefore, through speaking, students can effectively receive messages and obtain the desired information, as speaking serves as the primary tool for verbal communication and allows for the direct expression of ideas and opinions originating from our minds

Performance is derived from the word 'perform,' as defined in the Merriam Webster Dictionary, which refers to the action or process of carrying out or accomplishing a task, action, or function. According to Terry and Thomas (1997) as cited in Normawati (2015, p. 53), performance pertains to the actions of an individual or a group when given a learning task. It signifies the execution of an action with a specific purpose, such as completing a task. De Kort & Leerdam (2009) as cited in Husnawati (2017, p. 8) describe performance as the actions undertaken by an individual or group when assigned a learning task. The psychological processes involved in performance include the regulation of thoughts and emotions to become proficient English speakers.

Good (1959) states that when performance is associated with expressive activity, it encompasses two aspects: (1) the creation or execution of something as a means of acquiring knowledge and (2) the utilization of language as a medium of communication to express concepts and emotions. Based on these definitions, it can be concluded that performance in speaking English refers to the capacity or ability to articulate thoughts and ideas through verbal communication.

Thomburry (2002, p. 1) observes that speaking performance is so ingrained in our daily lives that we often take it for granted. The average person produces tens of thousands of words each day, with some individuals like auctioneers or politicians generating even more. Speaking is such a natural and integral part of our lives that we may forget the struggles we once faced in acquiring this skill, until we have to learn it all over again in a foreign language. Jones adds that in speaking and listening, we engage in tasks such as problem-solving, idea exploration, understanding various aspects of the world, or simply enjoying social interactions. In writing, we may be documenting events or preserving moments on paper. Speaking allows us to express our ideas and share them with others by producing words that reflect our thoughts and perspectives.

Speaking performance, particularly in a foreign language, poses significant challenges for learners of all ages. In order to effectively communicate and share understanding using a foreign language, learners must pay careful attention to the intricacies of the language. Additionally, organizing the discourse in a way that ensures the interlocutor comprehends the speaker's message is crucial (Cameron, 2001).

To achieve mastery in speaking performance, learners require ample practice. According to Pinter (2005), speaking practice begins with exercises and drills involving fixed phrases and repetitive patterns. Consequently, in the process of teaching English as a foreign language (EFL), teachers should avoid burdening students with overly demanding tasks solely for the sake of fluency and accuracy. Fluency and accuracy are the outcomes of extensive and prolonged learning processes, which develop slowly and gradually. However, the most important aspect is that students learn and make progress throughout the journey.

Elements of Speaking Performance

There are numerous elements of speaking that students must master to become proficient speakers. According to Bahdi (2014), speaking ability can be divided into five key. It can be been in explanations below:

a. Accuracy and Pronunciation

Recognizably, accuracy is one of the most important criteria to measure one's linguistic ability and to shelter language users from communication breakdowns. According to Richards (1992) accuracy concerns "the ability to produce grammatically correct sentence" (p. 8). In other words, accuracy in language means grammatical accuracy only. The terms accuracy seems to cover more than that. Specifically, speaking English accurately means doing without or with few errors on not only grammar but vocabulary and pronunciation, as well.

Anjaniputra (2013) also sets the clear scale for assessment of accuracy, they are; Grammar, students use correct words order, tenses, tense agreement, etc. Students do not leave out articles, prepositions or difficult tenses; vocabulary, students have a range of vocabulary that corresponds to the syllabus year list and uses words you have taught; pronunciation, students speak and most people understand.

Accuracy in speaking refers to the ability to produce correct sentences using appropriate grammar and vocabulary. Therefore, speaking with good accuracy entails demonstrating proper pronunciation, employing correct grammar, and using suitable vocabulary. Pronunciation plays a crucial role in enabling students to communicate clearly. As stated by Lin (2014), "pronunciation is the most important skill in spoken English" (p. 16), as it involves accurately pronouncing words based on their customary pronunciation.

To achieve good pronunciation, students need to master four key aspects: sound, stress, intonation, and rhythm. If any of these aspects are neglected, it may lead to misunderstandings between the speaker and the listener.

b. Grammar

In conversation, it is necessary for students to construct sentences correctly. They should utilize their ability to manipulate sentence structures and differentiate between appropriate and inappropriate grammatical forms. Grammar is a fundamental component of language. As noted by Bahdi (2014), grammar represents an internal, linguistic knowledge that governs the production and comprehension of well-structured expressions in a given language. In other words, grammar determines how words are organized to form accurate sentences. It encompasses aspects such as sentence structure, word order, and grammatical categories such as nouns, subjects, and imperative clauses. Grammar is an indispensable part of any language and cannot be fully mastered without acquiring a solid understanding of its rules and principles (Subasini and Kokilavani, 2013, p. 57).

A solid understanding of grammar enables students to construct grammatically and lexically correct sentences. When speakers make errors in grammar during communication, it can lead to misunderstandings for the listeners who are trying to interpret the intended meaning of the utterance. Therefore, using grammar accurately is crucial for effective communication and ensuring that the intended message is conveyed correctly.

c. Vocabulary

Attaining accuracy in vocabulary selection is essential for effective speaking. Students often encounter difficulties when trying to express their thoughts, as they may lack the appropriate vocabulary or use words incorrectly, especially when dealing with synonyms that carry different meanings in different contexts. Therefore, it is crucial for students to use words and expressions accurately. Insufficient vocabulary hinders effective communication and the ability to express ideas both orally and in written form. A recent study conducted by Larson, Dixon, and Townsend (2013, p. 16) concluded that vocabulary refers to the total number of words that constitute a language, along with the rules for combining them.

Indeed, vocabulary comprises content words, including nouns, verbs, adjectives, and adverbs, as well as function words such as prepositions, conjunctions, articles, and pronouns. Certain vocabulary exercises require careful preparation, especially for adult learners (Nation, 2009, p. 2). These exercises should be planned systematically to cover specific areas of vocabulary, ensuring that essential vocabulary is reinforced repeatedly for effective learning. While grammar provides the structure, it is vocabulary that allows for conveying meaningful information. Without an adequate vocabulary, effective communication becomes challenging. Therefore, vocabulary is crucial as it encompasses the appropriate choice of words used in communication, enabling individuals to express their thoughts and ideas effectively.

d. Comprehension

Comprehension involves having an adequate vocabulary and knowing the meanings of enough words. Students with strong comprehension skills are capable of drawing conclusions, identifying important information, distinguishing facts, understanding causes and effects, and recognizing humorous elements in what they read or speak. Therefore, comprehension combines reading with thinking and reasoning, and it is crucial for effective oral communication. Additionally, according to Bahdi (2014), comprehensibility refers to the process of understanding the utterances conveyed by a speaker, as perceived by the listener. Comprehensibility encompasses two common senses (Torky, 2006, p. 49).

In a narrow sense, it pertains to the extraction of meaning from sounds. In a broader sense, it involves the interpretation of meaning and the utilization of the conveyed speech acts. In other words, when two individuals engage in communication, they speak because they possess different information. The speaker's activity of speaking should be comprehended by both the speaker and the listener. For instance, when a question is posed, the listener extracts the important information and seeks an answer. Comprehension is thus an essential component of speaking skills, where the speaker must effectively convey their ideas to ensure the listener's understanding. As we know, the purpose of speaking is to transfer ideas from the speaker to the listener.

e. Fluency

Indeed, the primary objective of teaching the productive skill of speaking is to develop oral fluency, which is a key characteristic of effective speaker performance. Fluency, as defined by Fromkin (1988) and Christiansen (2012), refers to the ability to express oneself intelligibly, reasonably, and accurately, without excessive hesitation. If there are frequent hesitations or interruptions, the communication may break down, leading to a loss of interest from the listeners. Therefore, in order to achieve this goal, teachers should encourage learners to freely use their own language to express their ideas, rather than merely imitating a specific model. Fluency involves responding in a coherent manner by effectively linking words and phrases, pronouncing sounds clearly, and using appropriate stress and intonation (Nation and Newton, 2009, p. 151). By developing fluency, learners can communicate their thoughts and ideas smoothly and effectively.

Fluency can be defined as the ability to speak smoothly, accurately, and without hesitation. It is a desired goal for many language learners. Fluent speakers exhibit a reasonably fast speaking pace and use only a few pauses such as "ums" and "ers." These indicators suggest that the speaker does not spend a significant amount of time searching for the language items needed to convey their message. In addition, certain criteria can be used to assess fluency. They include:

- Lack of hesitation: Students speak in a smooth, natural manner without prolonged pauses, making it
- 2) Length: Students are able to connect ideas and construct messages or arguments. They can use not only simple sentence patterns but also complex ones to fulfill the task at hand.
- 3) Independence: Students demonstrate the ability to express their ideas in various ways, engage in sustained conversation by asking questions, and employ other techniques to keep the conversation flowing (Khadidja, 2010, p. 2).

By achieving fluency, learners become more proficient in conveying their thoughts and maintaining effective communication.

Foreign Language Anxiety (FLA)

A significant study conducted by Horwitz (1986) laid the foundation for the term "foreign language anxiety" or "language anxiety." This phenomenon has been extensively researched in the language classroom, revealing that some learners experience negative language anxiety (Marcos-Llinas & Garau, 2009).

Foreign language anxiety, also known as language anxiety, is characterized as a complex combination of self-perceptions, beliefs, feelings, and behaviors that arise in the context of classroom language learning, which is unique in its nature (Horwitz, Horwitz, & Cope, 1986). It is closely associated with how individuals perceive themselves, their beliefs about language learning, the emotions they experience, and their behaviors in the classroom. When students encounter new and unfamiliar situations, their self-perceptions, beliefs, feelings, and behaviors related to classroom learning may vary.

Anxiety in English as a Foreign Language (EFL) classes has been extensively discussed by researchers, as it is a significant issue that affects students' achievement. Mesri (2012, p. 1) defines foreign language anxiety as the feeling of tension and apprehension specifically associated with learning a foreign language, encompassing listening, speaking, reading, and writing. Foreign language anxiety is context-specific, meaning it is related to the language learning environment (Horwitz, 2001, p. 115). It is important to consider foreign language anxiety as it can create emotionally and physically uncomfortable experiences for students in EFL classes. When students are highly anxious, they are likely to be less actively engaged in the teaching and learning process.

Anxiety is a common experience that can be felt by people worldwide, particularly when speaking in front of a large audience. Brown (2000) describes anxiety as a state associated with feelings of uneasiness, frustration, self-doubt, apprehension, and worry. In other words, anxiety is generally connected to perceptions of threats to one's self-efficacy and appraisals of situations as being threatening (Pappamihiel, 2002). When learners experience anxiety in their foreign language learning, it can negatively impact their enjoyment of studying and their self-confidence. They may perceive certain aspects of language learning as challenging or difficult, leading to frustration.

According to Reber (1995 cited in Ali et al., 2013), anxiety is an emotional state that arises in unpleasant conditions without a specific object. While using one's native language in everyday speaking is a common occurrence, using a foreign language or a language that is rarely encountered in daily conversations can feel awkward. People, in general, tend to feel unhappy when faced with uncomfortable situations, especially if they have had negative experiences in the past

Based on the explanations above, it can be concluded that anxiety is a feeling of fear, worry, nervousness, and discomfort associated with stressful or frightening situations. It is often accompanied by physical symptoms such as trembling, sweating, and an elevated heart rate. This negative reaction stems from perceiving something as unpredictable and beyond one's control, possibly triggered by previous negative experiences in similar situations..

a. Types of Foreign Language Anxiety

Horwitz, et. al. (1986, p. 127) state that there are three types of foreign language anxiety that have been identified in order to break down construct into researchable issues. There are three related anxieties as components of foreign language anxiety: communication apprehension (the fear of communicating with other people), text anxiety (fear of exams, quizzes, and other assignments used to evaluate the students' performance), and fear of negative evaluation (the worry about how others view the speaker). Here are the brief explanations about three of them:

1) Communication apprehension

One of the most extensively studied topics in the field of speech communication is the tendency of certain individuals to avoid or fear oral communication. Communication apprehension (CA) is defined by Horwitz et al. (1986) as a type of shyness characterized by fear or anxiety when communicating with others. This condition becomes evident in speaking performances when students are required to speak in front of their peers. Shyness can hinder their ability to perform at their best. The experience of shyness can vary significantly from person to person and from one situation to another.

McCroskey and Bond (1980, 1984, as cited in Tanveer 2007) identified seven factors that can contribute to a child being quiet, which can also shed light on adult communication apprehension. These factors include:

- 1) Low intellectual skills
- 2) Deficiencies in speech skills
- 3) Voluntary social introversion
- 4) Social alienation
- 5) Communication anxiety
- 6) Low social self-esteem
- 7) Ethnic/cultural differences in communication norms.

These factors provide potential explanations for why individuals may exhibit communication apprehension, whether as children or adults. Understanding the underlying factors contributing to communication apprehension can help educators and researchers develop strategies to support individuals in overcoming their fears and improving their oral communication skills.

According to Horwitz et al. (1986, p. 127), communication apprehension refers to a type of shyness characterized by fear or anxiety about communicating with others. Shabani (2012, p. 2379) adds that communication apprehension is often observed in cases where learners have mature ideas and thoughts but lack mature communication skills. This apprehension arises when students do not feel comfortable communicating in the target language, particularly in speaking and listening skills, due to their limited language proficiency.

In the foreign language classroom, oral tasks require learners not only to learn the target language but also to perform and use it effectively. Oral communication encompasses both listening and speaking. Liu (2012, p. 120) highlights that many students experience heightened anxiety when they have to speak a foreign language in front of their classmates. They may lack opportunities to practice and communicate with their teachers and peers. For example, when a student engages in a conversation with the teacher in English, they may feel anxious and apprehensive about not fully understanding what the teacher is saying. Similarly, a student may lack confidence when they need to explain something to another student in English.

The fear and anxiety associated with communication apprehension can hinder students' oral language development and their ability to effectively engage in real communication. Recognizing and addressing this apprehension is crucial for creating a supportive learning environment where students can gain confidence and improve their oral communication skills

2) Test anxiety Mayer

Richard In (2008, p. 77), argues that students are aware that taking a test entails being graded, judged, and compared to their classmates. This understanding can lead to test anxiety, where students fear the negative consequences of performing poorly and disappointing their teachers and parents. Test anxiety can manifest in various physical, mental, and emotional symptoms, which can vary from one child to another. Some children may outwardly display their anxiety, while others suffer silently.

Physical symptoms associated with test anxiety may include heart palpitations, shortness of breath, chest tightness or pain, stomachaches, nausea, vomiting, diarrhea, shaky limbs, and body aches. trembling, headaches, These physical manifestations can significantly impact students' ability to concentrate on the test material or remember what they have studied. The presence of such symptoms can create additional stress and hinder students' performance on the test.

It is important for educators and parents to recognize and address test anxiety in students. By providing a supportive and nurturing environment, implementing effective stress-reducing strategies, and promoting a balanced approach to assessments, students can better manage their anxiety and perform to the best of their abilities.

Horwitz, et al. (1986, p. 127) define test anxiety as a type of performance anxiety that arises from a fear of failure in an academic evaluation setting. Shabani (2012, p. 2379) explains that test anxiety is the fear of performing poorly in tests and is an unpleasant experience held consciously or unconsciously by learners in various situations. Birjandi and Alemi (2010, p. 47) identify two main reasons for test anxiety:

- a) Lack of preparation: This includes behaviors such as cramming the night before the exam, poor time management, failure to organize study materials effectively, and inadequate study habits.
- b) Worrying about performance and consequences: This involves concerns about past performance on exams, comparisons with peers, and the negative consequences of failure.

Tsiplakides (2009, p. 39) adds that students who experience test anxiety tend to view the foreign language learning process, particularly oral production, as a test situation rather than an opportunity for communication and skill improvement. To address this, teachers should create a communicative atmosphere in the classroom rather than solely focusing on formal assessments. It is important for teachers to employ appropriate language teaching strategies, especially in the context of teaching English as a foreign language, to alleviate test anxiety and promote a positive learning environment.

3) Fear of negative evaluation

Lucas, Miraflores, and Go (2011, p. 102) define fear of negative evaluation as the apprehension about being evaluated negatively by others, which can lead to avoidance of evaluation situations and expectations of negative evaluations. Shabani (2012, p. 2382) identifies seven sources of fear of negative evaluation:

- a) Fear of leaving an unfavorable impression on others.
- b) Fear of being negatively judged by others.
- c) Fear of saying or doing the wrong things.
- d) Fear of negative thoughts held by others.
- e) Fear of others noticing their shortcomings.
- Fear of being criticized or finding faults with.
- g) Fear of disapproval by others.

Furthermore, individual differences the classroom can contribute to the presence of anxiety. Individual differences refer to psychological traits or chronic tendencies that contribute to a sense of consistency, internal causality, and personal distinctiveness (Carver & Scheier, 2000). In other words, individual differences are related to the competitiveness observed within the classroom. Students often compare their own abilities and perceptions with those of their classmates, which can lead to stress and anxiety if they perceive themselves to have lower capabilities compared to others.

b. Factors of Foreign Language Anxiety

According to Ernawati & Fatma (2012) there are two factors influence the students' anxiety that is the internal and external factors.

1) The External Factors

a) Lack of Preparation

Insufficient allocation of time for self-preparation is a common factor that can trigger speaking anxiety. Liu M (2007) suggests that many students experience anxiety when they are unprepared, and conversely, being prepared plays a significant role in reducing anxiety. Research indicates that inadequate preparation can contribute to students' anxiety levels. Some students have admitted to experiencing high levels of anxiety when they have not adequately prepared for tests or speaking exercises. One student attributed their excessive worry to studying less, highlighting the correlation between preparation and anxiety levels.

b) Lack of vocabulary

Khan (2005) emphasizes that many students studying English as a foreign language face difficulties when it comes to speaking words and phrases. While they may understand the intended meaning in their native language, they often find it challenging to use the appropriate vocabulary when switching to the target language, such as English. This struggle with vocabulary usage can lead to anxiety and apprehension among students, particularly in formal or academic conversations. In a survey conducted by Liu M, learners expressed their belief that vocabulary presents a significant obstacle to their English language acquisition.

Classmates play a significant role in language acquisition. interactions with classmates However, sometimes lead to stressful situations that make learners feel uncomfortable or tense during conversations. It is natural to feel uneasy when other students are observing or judging you. According to Tsiplakides (2009:39), fear of negative peer evaluation is a common factor in language learning. Despite the importance of classmates in the educational journey, they can also be a source of anxiety for students.

d) Embarrassment

Embarrassment is indeed a significant factor that contributes to student anxiety in the process of learning a second or foreign language. According to Kessler (2010), learning to speak a new language involves the potential for experiencing embarrassment. As educators and learners, it is important to be mindful of situations or aspects of language learning that may lead to embarrassment. By creating a supportive and non-judgmental learning environment, we can help alleviate anxiety and encourage students to take risks and participate actively in language learning without the fear of embarrassment.

2) The Internal Factors

a) Lack of self Confidence

Cubukcu (2007:133) suggests that anxious students often struggle in their foreign language studies. In other words, students who feel confident and comfortable in language classes tend to experience less fear and anxiety. Therefore, it is crucial to consider the role of self-confidence as a key factor in successful language learning. When students have a positive sense of self-confidence, they are more likely to engage actively in the learning process and achieve better results. Building and nurturing self-confidence in language learners can contribute to a more positive and effective language learning experience.

b) Shyness

Shyness is an emotional state that many students often struggle with, especially when it comes to participating in oral communication activities in an English language classroom.

Gabhard (2000:2) emphasizes the importance of addressing this aspect in order to promote optimal classroom performance among students. Building on existing literature, Baldwin (2011:13) observes that individuals who experience common phobias, similar to students, may exhibit shyness and experience cognitive blockage when speaking in public settings. It is not uncommon for individuals to omit or fail to provide explanations during spoken or written communication due to shyness. According to popular belief, the inability to showcase one's oral communication skills is significantly influenced by a sense of timidity. In other words, shyness has a significant impact on students' verbal communication abilities.

c) Motivation

Motivation is widely recognized as a critical factor that influences academic success among students, as supported by existing literature (Songsiri, 2007:24). Nunan (1999:234) emphasizes the importance of recognizing the impact of motivation on learning, as it can significantly affect students' willingness to engage in English communication. Motivation plays a crucial role in determining a learner's communicative abilities.

According to HerZua's (2008) perspective, as cited in Juhana's (2012) work (p. 103), motivation is an inherent drive within individuals. Regardless of the specific motivations that influence learners, their inclination towards learning is strengthened. Numerous research studies have emphasized the importance of student motivation in improving learning outcomes. The findings suggest that students who demonstrate high levels of motivation to succeed exhibit greater perseverance in their educational endeavors, leading to more positive academic achievements compared to those with low levels of motivation.

d) Fear of Making Mistakes

Many students feel hesitant to participate in class discussions due to their fear of being ridiculed by their peers or others. As a result, they often refrain from expressing their opinions or thoughts openly. According to Liu M.'s research, students commonly experience anxiety when they anticipate making mistakes or receiving negative feedback. These fears are frequently manifested in the classroom setting.

Jones (2004) emphasizes that the classroom presents numerous challenges for students, with one of the most significant being the constant scrutiny from others who may attempt to correct or mock them. Moreover, in a formal classroom environment, errors made by students can lead to blame and potential disciplinary consequences. Therefore, students are expected to provide accurate and precise responses, even in simple mathematical equations such as Kondo and Ling (2004) write in academic journal about strategies for reducing language anxiety. In their journal, there are five strategies can used by students for reducing their anxiety to perform in front of class, namely: preparation, relaxation, positive thinking, peer seeking and resignation.

1) Preparation

The first strategy is preparation. In this strategy, students strive to take control of themselves by improving their learning and study strategies. This includes studying diligently and seeking comprehensive summaries of lecture notes. By employing these strategies, students are expected to enhance their subjective perception of mastering the subject matter, consequently reducing the anxiety associated with the language class. Researchers argue that preparation is an effective strategy because it allows individuals to mentally prepare themselves to face potential challenges or situations. It helps instill a sense of readiness and confidence.

2) Relaxation

The second strategy is relaxation. The goal of this strategy is to alleviate somatic anxiety symptoms. It involves intentionally relaxing the body through various techniques, such as taking deep breaths and calming oneself down. The more one is able to relax, the more their anxiety diminishes. To practice relaxation in the classroom, one can sit comfortably and maintain good posture. Before or during class, they can take slow, deep breaths, holding each breath for four or five seconds before releasing it slowly. This exercise helps convert nervous energy into positive energy by promoting a calming release of breath (Tseng, 2012).

Additionally, the researcher also observed that including praying to God as a relaxation technique. For individuals who have religious beliefs and trust in a higher power, praying to their God is another way to relax their minds. Therefore, various methods can be employed for relaxation, such as taking deep breaths, attempting to calm down, drinking water, closing the eyes, praying, and more. It is important to note that different individuals may have different preferred methods of relaxation.

3) Positive Thinking

The third strategy is positive thinking. It involves consciously shifting one's thoughts from negative or worrisome aspects to positive and optimistic ones. This strategy aims to alleviate the cognitive processes that contribute to student anxiety, allowing them to cool down and feel more at ease. By focusing on positive cues and thoughts, students can redirect their attention away from the stressful situation and experience relief. Examples of positive thinking strategies include imagining oneself performing exceptionally well, attempting to find enjoyment even in tense situations, and cultivating a mindset that acknowledges mistakes as a normal part of language learning.

Positive thinking involves recognizing that everyone makes mistakes when learning a language and that errors are an integral part of the learning process. It is important to embrace a positive perspective and realize that perfection is unattainable and not a prerequisite for success. By adopting a positive mindset, students can boost their confidence and reduce anxiety in language learning (Tseng, 2012).

4) Peer Seeking

The fourth strategy is peer seeking, which involves students actively seeking out peers who may also be struggling to understand the class material or manage their anxiety. This strategy is characterized by a willingness to connect with others who are experiencing similar difficulties. For anxious students, the knowledge that they are not alone in their struggles can provide emotional support and regulation through social comparison.

By engaging with peers who share similar challenges, students can create a sense of solidarity and find comfort in knowing that they are not the only ones facing difficulties. Sharing experiences, discussing concerns, and seeking advice from others who can relate to their situation can help alleviate anxiety and foster a supportive learning environment. Peer seeking allows students to build connections, gain perspective, and receive encouragement from their peers, which can contribute to emotional well-being and academic success.

5) Resignation

This is characterized by students to run from the problem and they do not want to belong to the activity because minimizing the impact of anxiety by refusing to face the problem. Some of the action in this strategies are giving up, sleeping in class. The Researcher argues that it is one of the extreme strategy. This may be because "accepting the reality" is one of many ways to reduce stress and tension. They do not want to try and re-try after failing because they are afraid of more stress. Resignation seems to be one possible strategy choose by the students. This strategy only offers a temporary quick solution. Later, those students have to face greater problems. They may not be able to acquire proper mastery of the second language and may also fail in examining.

B. Relevant Research

Reviewing some previous researches conducted by other researchers is intended to keep the originality of previous research. According to Syafi'i (2018), in relevant research, the researcher is required to observe some anxiety. This research conducted to examine the scope and severity of foreign language anxiety. The samples of this research were seventy-five university extudents (thirty-nine males and thirty-six females ranging in age from eighteen to twenty-seven) from four intact introductory Spanish classes. The FLCAS was administered to the students during their scheduled language class the third week of the semester. The findings of this research indicate that foreign language anxiety is experienced by many students in responding to at least some aspects of learn English. The majority of statements reflecting foreign language anxiety (nineteen out of thirty-three items) are supported by a third for more of the students surveyed, and seven statements are supported by more than half the students. The rest experienced severe reactions to foreign language learning, this result (considered based on the number of students stating the need for student language support groups) implies that anxious students are common in foreign languages class (at least in the beginning class at the university level).

The data were obtained through observation of class interaction and interview. The data were analyzed descriptively and interpreted to answer the research question. The study revealed two findings related to research questions. First, two types of anxiety were evidenced, i.e. trait anxiety and state/situational anxiety. Second, the students" anxiety in English speaking xclass was derived from three main sources of anxiety, i.e. communication apprehension, test anxiety and fear of negative evaluation. Moreover, as the interview data revealed, lack of vocabularies and lack of preparation have also contributed to students" anxiety in speaking. These findings suggest that the teacher should be more aware of students" anxiety in order to arouse students" motivation to speak up confidently and fluently in an English speaking class. As such, teachers are urged to be fairly creative in devising better technique that could encourage the students to speak more.

Mitha & Amri (2018) conducted research about an analysis of students" speaking anxiety faced by the fourth semester students of english ducation study program of english department of universitas negeri padang. Based on the research analysis, it was found that the level of students" speaking anxiety is in the middle level with the percentage was 82%. Anastasia and Ira (2020) conducted research about Students' Speaking  $\subset$ Anxiety on their Speaking Performance: A Study of EFL Learners—In the new era of industrial revolution 4.0, it demands that people should enhance their communication competence to interact globally. The ability to speak a foreign language is prominently influenced by one of the problems, namely speaking anxiety. This language production barrier affects various aspects of oral communication. This study aimed at finding out the impact of speaking anxiety on freshmen's speaking performance. There were seventy eight freshmen of the 2018/2019 batch involved as the participants of this study. The data were collected by using a Personal Report of Public Speaking Anxiety (PRPSA) questionnaire as well as students' speaking performance, which was evaluated by using a speaking rubric. Pearson Product Moment formula was used to analyze the correlation between the two variables. It was found out that speaking anxiety was correlated to the speaking performance. Fear and nervousness produced by speaking anxiety would affect oral anguage performance.

Conceptual framework of this research is explained as follows.

Speaking is one of the skills that students acquire as language learners.

In this research, speaking performance refers to the ability of students in their seventh semester, who are pre-service teachers, to use English as the medium of instruction during the teaching practice program (PPL).

Z Speaking performance can be a challenging task for many students. S However, there are many problems occur during speaking performance. One not the problem is related to foreign language anxiety. Foreign language canxiety is the feeling of unease, worry, nervousness and apprehension experienced in learning or using a second or foreign language. Horwitz (2001) defines foreign language anxiety as a distinct complex of selfperceptions, beliefs, feelings, and behaviours related to classroom language learning arising from the uniqueness of the language learning process.

In this research the rsearcher focus on two problems as the research question:

- What are the factors that cause the EFL students feel anxious in speaking English?

  Do the students' have any strategies to reduce their anxiety in speaking? yes, how do they cope with their anxiety?

  As the result, some findings related to Foreign language anxiety speaking performance by the seventh semester students of UIN Suska Riau. What are the factors that cause the EFL students feel anxious in speaking

METHOD OF THE RESEARCH

A3Research Design

In this study, the researcher used a qualitative research. In qualitative research, things are studied in their natural settings, where the researcher cattempt to make sense or interpret phenomena being observed(Creswell 1997, in Sugiyono, 2017,p. 42).

a Qualitative researchers are concerned with the perspective to explore the ideas and perceptions of the participants (Merriam, 1998, p. 4). The researcher tried to examine the experience from the participant"s point of view in order to interpret his/her words. The researcher sough to collect some dense descriptions from the narrative data gathered from the participants, to interpret and portray their experiences, and to generate empathetic and experiential understanding.

C. Participants of the Research

To select the participants for the research, the researcher employed the Su purposive sampling technique. According to Marguerite (2006, p. 140) and Syarif Kasim Riau Tqualitative research to identify key informants or individuals who possess especific knowledge about the topic under study. The specific type of purposive sampling chosen by the researcher depends on the purpose of the study. In this especific needs and objectives of the research.

Participants of the research were pre-service students in the seventh semester of the English department at UIN Suska. Among the four classes in the seventh semester, the researcher chose Class D because they exhibited signs of anxiety in speaking English, and the researcher had easier access to contact them as research participants. Class D consisted of twenty-three students, including three males and eighteen females, who were given a questionnaire. Additionally, the researcher selected seven students out of the twenty-three for further interviews.

D. Technique of Collecting Data

Kasim Riau

Data for the research were collected using a questionnaire and linterviews. The questionnaire is a commonly used and valuable tool for collecting information. It provides structured data, often in numerical form, and can be administered without the presence of the researcher. Questionnaires are relatively straightforward to analyze (Wilson and McLean, 1994, as cited in Cohen et al., 2007).

The researcher utilized close-ended questionnaires administered through Google Forms as a communication medium to facilitate the data collection process. This approach made it convenient for the researcher to Igather information from the participants. By analyzing the collected data from othe questionnaires, the researcher aimed to identify the factors that contribute ato students feeling anxious in speaking. Additionally, open-ended interviews were conducted to obtain information about the strategies employed by students to reduce their anxiety in speaking.

1. Interview

An interview is a form of verbal communication used to gather information. It involves asking a series of questions orally and receiving verbal responses from one or more respondents. Interviews are conducted directly, usually face-to-face, with the aim of obtaining reliable and valid measures through verbal interactions. According to Bungin (2007, p.111), an in-depth interview is a research process where the interviewer and the informant engage in face-to-face questioning, either with or without the use of an interview guide, in order to obtain information for research purposes.

An interview is a conversational method used for gathering information. In a research interview, there is an interviewer who leads the conversation by asking questions, and an interviewee who responds to those questions. In this particular research, the researcher conducted interviews with seventh-semester students who were engaged in teaching practice, specifically focusing on speaking anxiety in the classroom, particularly in relation to the learning of speaking skills. The purpose of the interview was to complement the questionnaire data.

The interview was also aimed at addressing the research objectives, specifically the students factors in speaking anxiety and exploring the students' strategies for reducing their anxiety. An open-ended interview approach was utilized to collect data, allowing the students in Class D to freely express their thoughts and experiences. To ensure better understanding and avoid any miscommunication, the interviews were conducted in the Indonesian language, which was the students' native language.

2. Questionnaire

The second instrument used in this research is a questionnaire. A questionnaire is a data collection technique that involves providing a set of questions or written statements to participants. In this study, the questionnaire was utilized to assess students' foreign language anxiety. It consisted of several questions related to foreign language anxiety.

The questionnaire used in this research was adapted from the final version of the Public Speaking Class Anxiety Scale (PSCAS) developed by Yaikhong & Usaha in 2012. The PSCAS consists of 13 statements designed to identify the causes of anxiety in students when speaking English. The means of data collection

The technique of data analysis in this research is Qualitative analysis.  $\bar{z}$ Using this technique, the researcher collects, arranges and presents the data. The qualitative method is a kind of research without using any calculation or statistic procedures. The scheme above is the techniques in analyzing data by:

1. Data Reduction

Data reduction means the process of selecting, simplifying, abstracting, identifying, and transforming the data appear in written-up transcripts interview and questionnaire result. In conducting research, the research gets much data. The research must select data that give valuable information in research. Thus, the research has to do a reduction to analyze the data First, the mass of the data to be organized and some how meaningfully reduced or reconfigured. According to Miles (1994 p. 10), data reduction refers to process of selecting, focusing, abstracting and transforming the data.

This case, the researcherselected the data that contain of questionnaire and interview to the students. Then, this summary analyze to see the important information, group the data, and selected the data are need and arrange the data to the proper format, so it can give meaningful result and conclusion.

Data Display

Data display is the second phase in Miles model of qualitative data analysis. This phase provides an organized and compossed assembly of information that permits for conclusion drawing. The researcher displayed the data that have been reduced in older to facilitate for data interpretation. It display in a table with the basic categories such as factors contribute to language anxiety.

Conclusion Drawing and Verification

Conclusion drawing involves stepping back to consider what analyzed data mean and to assess their implication for the research question. In this phase, the writer drew meaning from the data in a display. Miles (1994 p. 11) stated Verification is linked toconclusion drawing, entails revising the data as many times as a necessary to cross-check verifies these emergent conclusion. Verification refers to the process which is able to explain the answer of research questions and research objectives.

Furthermore, the data have to be check for their sturdiness and confirmability. The researcher checked the validation of the data using triangulation strategy. According to Miles (1994 p. 267) triangulating is a tratic for verifying or confirming findings by using multiple sources and modes of evidence. The researcher examine multiple sources such as interview responses and observational data as many times as necessary to obtain the valid findings of this study.

In this step, researcher can be concluded that three steps in repoting the result of a qualitative research. First, it is data reduction. It is to find out the key points of the research. Second, after got the key points of the research, it describes in the form narrative to be meaningful and more easy understood. The last is conclusion drawing. In this step, the researcher make a conclusion about the researcher after analyzing all of the data.

F. Triangulation

In this research, the researcher uses triangulation technique. According to Lincolin (2009 . p. 16) Triangulation may be defined as the use of two or more methods of data collection in the study of some aspect of human behavior. Thus, triangulation technique means the researcher used two or more techniques in collecting the data to get validity. The purpose of triangulation is to increase the credibility and validity of the findings.

From those types of triangulation, the researcher will use methodological triangulation to get validity of data. Besides, the researcher Islamic University of Sultan Syarif Kasim Riau

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

This chapter consists of two parts. The first presents some conclusions based on the data analysis and findings of the previous chapter. The second part contains some suggestions based on the results and conclusions of this research.

A Conclusion

This research investigated the factors causing students' anxiety in speaking English and Students' strategy to reduce their anxiety. Conclusion drawn based on the findings of the research.

Based on the effects of the analysis, there are two factors influencing students' anxiety in speaking English that was internal and external factors, in internal factor there have been four indicators which include lack of self-confidence, shyness, motivation, fear of making mistakes and with inside the external factor additionally there have been also four indicators influencing students' anxiety in speaking English which include lack of vocabulary, embarrassment, classmates, lack of preparation.

According to the date analyzed used a questionnaire followed Yaikhong & Usaha in 2012. Factor shyness becoming the highest score from all indicators with 186 score. Influencing students' anxiety in speaking English factor shyness that has the highest inof all indicators. It means that shyness is the strong indicator that affect students' anxiety in speaking English. The other fear of making mistakes is the weakest indicator that affect students' anxiety in speaking English. It means that fear of making mistakes become the much ospeaking English.

The researcher also finds some strategies that were used by students in reducing anxiety in speaking English. Based on interview those are:

preparation, positive thinking, peer of seeking, resignation and relaxation.

B.Z Suggestion

Based on the conclusions that have been put forward above, the Tollowing implication and a recommendation for further related research are really suggested by the researcher. Those suggestions are drawn as follow.

For Teachers should understand and know the characters of their students to find out the problems faced by their students so that teachers can help students to overcome student problems. Teachers also play an important role in facilitating learning, especially in English classes, by creating a positive atmosphere in the classroom, creating a positive atmosphere, reducing anxiety, and making students feel happy and anxiety free.

The second is for students, Students as the ones who suffer anxiety here should be able to analyze their own lack in speaking performance. By realized the problemsthey have, students can find the way to deal with it.

They can ask for feedback from their teachers and friends about their speaking sperformance. The feedback is important to help students to analyze their own performance.

Finally, due to the study's limitations, additional research was required

Sto investigate the students' anxiety in speaking English. Future similar studies
